Page 1 | Search Results - Default View

Notes:

Users arrive at the Search Results page by entering a term into the search input box (located in the header of every page) and clicking the associated Search button. This wireframe represents the default presentation of the Search Results page once a search has been performed.

(1) Faceted Search Filters. Only filters related to the user's filter and have content associated to them are grouped into each of the 4 appropriate Content Categories and displayed as text links in the left column. A number is associated to each of the filters shown and indicates the total number of search result items that directly relate to that filter. Clicking a filter causes 3 things to happen:

- The body of the page is refreshed to show only search result items directly related to the filter selected and any previous filters selected by the user.
- The left column is refreshed to show only filters that now relate to all of the filters selected and have result items associated to them. If a Content Category no longer has any filters associated to it, that Content Category will be removed from the page. If a filter term has a second level of taxonomy (such as Africa/Middle East), clicking this filter will replace the top level of the taxonomy for that Content Category with the 2nd level of taxonomy for the selected filter. So for example; clicking Africa/Middle East, will display only the regions for Africa and the Middle East (see page 7).
- The selected filter will dynamically appear as the last selection in-line with the "Your Selections:" label at the top of the page (see page 3).

(2) & (3) Content Categories. Each content category is formatted to display 9 filters. If more than 9 filters exist for a content category then a scrollbar is displayed enabling users to browse the remaining filters. If less than 9 filters are displayed, the content category is resized appropriately.

(2) Is an example of a content category that has more than 9 filters, and a scrollbar for the overflow.

(3) Is an example of a content category that has less than 9 filters, and the height of the category has been shortened to fit the content.

(4) Back to Top. The "Back to top" link is located at the bottom of every page. When clicked, the user is automatically jumped to the top of the page.

Notes:

After users have selected a filter to apply to their search results, they are taken to this page. This wireframe shows an example of the Search Results page once a filter has been applied.

(1) Selected Filter. Each filter is displayed in the order of which it was selected. Each filter is presented as a link with an associated “Remove” icon. Clicking the link or icon clears that filter and causes the page to refresh to display filters in the left hand column that directly relate to the remaining selected filters.

(2) Clear All Filters. Clicking the “Clear all” link causes 2 things to happen:

- All of the filters that have been previously selected by the user are removed.
- It clears all selected filters, returning the page to its default state showing all search result items relating to the initial search term (example, risk).

Notes:

(1) Results per Page. This drop-down menu controls the number of search results that appear on each page. The default selection is “25 results.” Users have the ability to change the number of results displayed by selecting either 25, 50, 100 or 150 results. The user selection remains persistent until a new search is initiated (by entering a new search term into the search input box and clicking the associated button) or the user selects another option from this menu.

(2) Results Sort By Feature . This drop-down menu controls the ordering of the search results that appear on each page. The default selection is to order the results by “relevance” to the search term and filters the user applies. However, the user is able to change the ordering to one of four options.

- Relevance - default. This option categorizes the search results according to each results relevance to the search term and filters the user applied. The most relevant results are at the top and become less relevant with each result.
- Date. This option categorizes the search results from the most recent publications/forum posts etc. and goes backwards in time with each result.

Once the user has made a selection, the page will refresh and the ordering of results will change accordingly. The user selection remains persistent until a new search is initiated (by entering a new search term into the search input box and clicking the associated button) or the user selects another option from this menu.

(3) Highlighted Result Selection. Each search result highlights when the user moves his/her mouse over it. Clicking the search result title and/or image (if one appears) delivers users to that page of information.

Page 4 | Search Results - Filter Search & Pagination

Notes:

This wireframe illustrates how a 2nd level of taxonomy is treated.

(1) Second Level Taxonomy. If a filter term has a second level of taxonomy (such as Africa/Middle East), clicking this filter will replace the top level of the taxonomy for that Content Category with the 2nd level of taxonomy for the selected filter (as shown).

(2) Unrelated Filters Removed. Once the user has selected a filter, and it has been applied, the left column is refreshed to show only filters that now relate to all of the filters / search terms selected and have result items associated to them. The Content Category shrinks to fit the results remaining. If a Content Category no longer has any filters associated to it, that Content Category will be removed from the page.

(3) Filter added to Your Selections. Illustrates how additional filters selected by the user are displayed. Clicking the filter link or icon clears that filter and causes the page to refresh to display filters in the left hand column that directly relate to the remaining selected filters.

(4) Number of Results. Indicates the total number of search result items that have been returned by the selected filters. Also indicated, is the number range of the total search results currently in view. So for example, if the user has opted to display 25 results per page, the first page would show 1 - 25 and navigating to the second of page of results would change this number to display 26 - 50.

(5) Pagination. The first page of results will only display a "Next" text link at the top and bottom of the page. Clicking this link delivers users to the next page of search results if one exists. The last page of search results will only display a "Previous" link, which when clicked will deliver users to the previous page of search results. Any page besides the first and last pages of search results will display both the "Previous" and "Next" pagination links. Clicking each link will deliver the user to the appropriate previous or next page in the search results.
